

Robert Schuman Institute

LAW, LANGUAGE AND TRANSLATION AT THE COURT OF JUSTICE OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

Speaker: Karen McAuliffe, University of Birmingham

Discussant: Elina Paunio (Legal Secretary, CJEU)

Moderator: Prof. Robert Harmsen

Abstract

This paper explores the impact that language and translation may have on the way that the Court of Justice of the European Union (ECJ) functions and on the case law it produces. Based on the premise that language, culture and other dynamics within the ECJ shape the way that institution works, the paper examines the process behind the production of that Court's multilingual case law and reflects upon the linguistic cultural compromises at play in that production process.

This paper is based on data collected in the European Research Council (ERC) funded project 'Law and Language at the European Court of Justice'. More information on that project can be found here: www.llecj.karenmcauliffe.com

This seminar forms part of the series 'Interdisciplinary Perspectives on the Court of Justice of the European Union' to be hosted this semester by the Robert Schuman Institute. Seminars explore aspects of historical, linguistic, political science and sociological scholarship on the Court.

18 May 2018, 12:00-14:00

Location

University of Luxembourg
Weicker Building
Room B001 – Ground floor
4, rue Alphonse Weicker
L-2721 Luxembourg

Language

English

Registration

- free of charge
- required on Eventbrite
<https://bit.ly/2KcSiid>

Contact

Robert Harmsen robert.harmsen@uni.lu